

Why do generic approaches fail to produce step-change improvements in worker efficiency?

Traditional top-down improvements often fail to harness the knowledge, creativity and grit of the front-line workers. Covid aftermath favors the steady flow of small-scale improvements from a bottom-up, worker-first approach to process improvement.

